

Sir!

I am writing as a regular user of the cross border Rail Service, and a lady of a certain age who visits two of her children's families.

When I see the number of passengers who stay on the train after Edinburgh it makes no sense to have all these people spilling out on to the station at Waverley.

The convenience of straight through trains is very important to St. Andrews and Aberdeen. Both are university towns and St. Andrews features prominently in the tourist and golf industry. Similarly, Dundee has a university and growing in importance and interest.

This service is highly valued by many people.

Rail Services in the U.K. have a lot to be desired and to implement these changes would be a retrograde step for the population of the East Coast of Scotland.

Yours faithfully
