as a local resident of Kelvindale I am concerned at plans to close stations on the Anniesland to Queens Street line. As a mother of young children, without access to a car during the week, we make much use of this invaluable rail link. I have strong concerns that due to the very unreliable public bus service, which also has no wheelchair/buggy access, that shutting our local station will leave many without a reliable local public transport link. The same can also be said of many of the areas served by stations on this line for whom the train is a vital link for those without private transport.

As someone who's flat overlooks Kelvindale train station, I am surprised that this is being considered as the train station is busy during the day and particularly over the hours of commuting.

I trust that the wave of strong local feeling against these proposed closures is heard and noted in the consultation process.
