

Mary Ann Robinson

To whomsoever it may concern I consider the proposed closure of any rail station a disgrace As it is the one and the only one with a disabled access within the area of the East end of the city It is without a doubt more than just a disgrace it should be unlawful.

There is discrimination involved here from a vulnerable part of the public access to public buildings and I assume the rail link in part should come into that category it is an issue that has the protection of the government. Even families with young children prefer to take a train. But wheelchair access from Duke Street to Queen Street station should be left as it is at present infact there should be more stations made available as many people have difficulties with access that has many steep steps such as Bellgrove Alexandra Parade Sunnyside Anniesland Partick although it had the escalator not everyone is comfortable with that although it is slightly better than stairs. Please consider the vulnerable people are the bums on seats the reason there is a need for a rail service.